"Suppressed Desire" to Be Offered on Stage by Hope Player Group

These interested in dramatic productions are urged to see the one-act play in two episodes, "Suppressed Desires," which is to be presented Tuesday night at the Saenger theater, together with the popular picture "Strangers in Love." This play is being presented by the Little Theatre group which was organized a few weeks ago.

You may see how Henrietta learned to accept psychoanalysis for what it is really worth by attending the play Tuesday night. For it would be telling to let you in now on the revelation of the suppressed desires of Stephen Breswler,(played by Russell Henderson, and Mabel, the sister, played by Miriam Carlton.

The price of admission to both the picture and the play is only 40 cents. Come and help to stimulate an interest in the Little Theatre and its productions in the city of Hope.

Find Clue to Old Kidnaping Affair

Police on Trail of Billy Gaffney as Result of Lindbergh Case

NEW YORK.—A new shred of hope for a solution of the kidnaping more than five years ago of four-year-old Billy Gaffney of Brooklyn, was offered the New York police Sunday and they hastened to follow it to the limit.

The Bureau of Missing Persons at police headquarters received from a woman signing herself Mrs. R. S. Hawley of Emeryville, Cal., a letter in which she declared she was sure that another woman resident of that community is in possession of the missing Billy, now nine.

So convincing was the letter, and so closely did Mrs. Hawley's description of the Emeryville boy taly with that of the Gaffney child, Detective William T. Cox immediatel telegraphed the Emeryville police and asked them to launch the most thorough investigation.

In her letter, Mrs. Hawley said that she had read of Billy's description recently in a San Francisco newspaper, in an article published as the result of the Lindbergh baby kidnaping and that the description fitted that of the Emeryville boy exactly at the time he was first brought there.

She fixed that time as "early in 1927." It was on February 11, 1927, that Billy vanished from near the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Gaffney in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Hawley said in her letter that she was certain the woman guardian of the Emeryville boy had confided in some of her intimates that both had been living in Brooklyn prior to settling in Emeryville.

Emeryville is in the San Francisco Bay region, near Oakland.

Billy Gaffney's mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Gaffney, has never given up hope that some day he will be restored to her, and on every annivresary of his disappearance she has gone with her other children, Andrew and Irene, to her Catholic church and prayed for his return.

Yours very truly,

W. Hays, Suspected Early in Case, Is in Texarkana Jail

Negro Washington's Confession Brings Story to Light, Says Sheriff Wilson

BOTH HAD THE LOOT

Wallace's Money-Box Thrown to Negro by Hays, Confession Relates

The real murderer of Alfred Wallace was Wilmer Hays, a white man who killed him in a quarrel over a $25 debt, according to a signed confession by Ed Washington, negro prisoner, which was made public Monday by Sheriff John L. Wilson.

Hays was arrested at Buzzard Bluff, Miller county, with the help of Sheriff R. W. Turquette of Miller and was placed in jail at Texarkana. His hearing will probably be held in Hope this week.

Washington's confession, according to Sheriff Wilson, followed weeks of imprisonment during which the negro showed he knew much about the murder, but refused to divulge important details.

Story of Confession

Washington said in his confession [illegible] Hays came in, the morning of the murder. Wallace asked Hays if he was moving off his place, and when Hays said he was, Wallace asked him "What about the $25 you owe me?" Words followed, and Hays struck Wallace with an axe, accoroing to the negro Washington.

Hays then walked off the scene, but threw a box containing Wallace's money to Washington, the negro admitting catching it. The negro said that later he threw the box away, and didn't know whether there was money in it or not.

In his confession, Washington said the reason he hadn't revealed this story earlier was because Hays threatened to kill him.

Hays was under arrest for a time immediately after the murder, but later was released when authorities were unable to get sufficient evidence to hold him.

Told to Deputies

Washington's confession was made Saturday to Chief Deputy Sheriff Clarence E. Baker and Deputy Will Porter. It was witnessed by Sheriff Wilson and Deputy Prosecuting Attorney John Vesey.

Sheriff Wilson said Monday he had talked to Hays about the negro's confession, and that Hays admitted part of the story was true, but denied the actual murder.

Two Children Hit by Cars at Magnolia

Both Receive Severe Cuts About Faces and Bodies

MAGNOLIA.—Two small school boys, Carl Bird, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bird, and Bruce Crow, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Crow, all of Magnolia, sustained numerous severe cuts and bruises as a result of being knocked down on the street by automobiles here when they ran across the street in front of the vehicles. It is believed they are not hurt critically.

The Bird child was run down Sunday afternoon by his father's own car while speeding to a fire. Carl Jr. made an effort to wave his father down, but was too near after crossing the street to get on the right side. He was taken to a physcian who took five stitches on the child's ear and dressed other wounds.

The Crow child waited late Saturday afternoon until a truck passed and darted across in front of an automobile driven by Harry Parsley, youth of the southern part of Nevada county, who was here attending a school contest. The sun blinded the driver, and he failed to see the child. It was believed the victim was dead, but he was revived after several minutes. The child will be in bed many days with severe cuts and bruises, but it is believed his skull was not fractured as was first feared. Mr. and Mrs. Crow came here recently from Dardanelle. Mr. Crow is on the force of the Banner News.

Business and Government, in a Panic

WITH tax increases threatened, on the way, or actually here, the bewildered taxpayers are gradually realizing what a tremendous gulf lies between the management of business and of government.

In good times the similarity of organization would lead almost anyone to believe that government and business operate on the same theory and practice. But a panic period brings them in sharp contrast.

Both, indeed, are supposed to operate within their revenues. That is the theory. But in actual practice business achieves it where government does not. Business is an individual competitive enterprise. If practice doesn't coincide with theory, then the individual business goes bankrupt, leaving successful enterprises to march on to still greater prosperity. But government, representing the people as a whole and not operating for individual gain, invariably mistakes falling revenues as a signal for increased taxes rather than reduce expense.

Business could not possibly follow such a practice, for the revenue of one enterprise would be stolen by another. And so, government staggers into the quagmire of one tax increase after another, until, faced by revenues more shrunken after the tax increase than before, the legislators finally admit they are as bewildered as the taxpayers themselves.

As this writer showed repeatedly in this column, the county judges of Arkansas met in secret session a year ago and required the legislature to increase the gasoline tax so that the counties might have more revenue for roads and general purposes, notwithstanding the fact that the panic was then more than a year old, and the counties had poorer local roads an drendered less public service than at any time in the last several years.

So also, we have the sad fact to report that the mayors of eight cities of the first class met in Little Rock Saturday to sponsor a constitutional amendment authorizing an increase of 5 mills in the municipal tax "for the betterment of municipal fire and police departments."

Fortunately, however, the mayors being of a higher order of intellect than the county judges, they have framed their proposed legislation so that the people will have a chance to vote on it—and what the people will do to that amendment is just what the people always have done when misguided lawmakers chose a panic year in which to divorce themselves from first principles of business.

Cities represented at the Little Rock meeting were: Little Rock, Camden, El Dorado, Fort Smith, Jonesboro, Malvern, North Little Rock, and Texarkana.

Undoubtedly these mayors have the best intentions in the world, and that they are honorable men is proved by the fact that they are taking the people into their confidence by recommending an amendment which the voters will have to pass on.

How great the crisis is for their individual cities, we do not know. Fortunately, the City of Hope owes relatively little money, and is probably in as good shape as any Arkansas town.

If it weren't, and if our city had happened to be a party to the Little Rock conference last Saturday, certainly we would have recommended that before inflation of taxes we practice a little deflation of expenses.

Government tells us, "But it can't be done!"

But business will tell Mr. Government, "Big Boy, I said the same thing a year and a half ago when the banking panic set in. But I did it, nevertheless—and you've got it to do now."

The Police Gazette

THE Police Gazette, that sturdy reform organ of the sinful 40s, which looked upon wordliness so much that it finally became its apostle, has suspended publication and may, it is said, fold up for good.

Granddad of illustrated journalism and of the tabloids, it has fallen upon evil days—a disastrous fire in 1910, a costly absconcion in 1913, a $200,000 damage verdict against it in 1916, the competition of sporting departments of newspapers, the vanishing of the thrill of pictures of ladies in tights, once the exclusive province of the Police Gazette's pink pages, and finally the financial doldrums of the depression.

It would be defficult to estimate or appraise the influence which this journal of sports and little clothed men and ladies had during eighty years upon the manhood of this nation. Go into any barbershop, or into most pool halls, and there it was, worn and torn by much conning before the next issue came along. From it a great part of the rising youth of America acquired their first glimpse into the vague, glamorous and obviously sinful life of the nation's metropolis and its lesser centers.

For bad or good, it was an antidote to the restricted puritan existence of American town and small cities. It opened bold pagan vistas out of tight, cramping moralism. It coarsened while it revealed and liberated. It was a barroom, a prize ring, a burlesque house on pink paper, into which the callow if not necessarily lily pure American youth vicariously entered and became a man.

But in recent years the Police Gazette has been more a museum piece, a relic, than an indispensable purveyor of news and pictures that were once unavailable in other forms.—New York World-Telegram.

Hurley Denies He Talked Prohibition

Republican Dry Leaders Believe' They Have Convention in Hand

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Prohibition continued to stir on Capitol Hill Friday in the wake of quotations attributed to Secretary Hurley in Chicago Thursday night that the Republican National Convention in June would adopt a "more liberal" attitude toward the liquor question.

"When I want to speak in quotations, the words will be mine and not what someone else supposes I have said. I did not mention prohibition in my address in Chicago nor did I mention it anywhere else for publcation," Hurley said.

Hurley was quoted as telling an interviewer, "a great many people are going to look for the wet candidates on the ballots next November," and "eventually I think the prohibition question will be settled on the basis of state's rights."

Republican dry leaders at the capitol expect anti-prohibition delegations to make a fight at Chicago for a wet plank in the national platform, probably with greater vigor than ever before, but they doubt it will succeed.

Senator Borah stood by his previous prophecy that this plank would be similar to the rigid enforcement party declaration of four years ago.

Generally, the dry party leaders said they would dominate the situation unless something unforeseen happens meantime.

With revival of the wet talk has come a report that some members of identthe National Committee feel Vice President Curtis should be supplanted as a running mate for President Hoover by a man with more "liberal" views on prohibition to attract the Eastern vote. Administration leaders took no stock in this report.

Neither did David W. Mulvane of Topeka, Republican national committeeman from Kansas.

"The Republican national ticket," he said, "will be Hoover and Curtis, It has been taken for granted that the vice president would be renominated I think."

Superintendent DeArmand charged Henslee knew of the escapes Tuesday night and did not report them until the next day. Henslee said that there was no way to check up the trusties and that he did not know of the escapes until morning roll call.

It was learned that several friends of Henslee intended making an appeal to Governor Parnell for his reinstatement.

Talked Too Much

DENVER, Col.—A rebellious autoist, John A. Timson, appeared before Police Judge Alvin H. Pickins. "What have you to say?" asked the court. "My say apparently wouldp't do any good." Timson replied. 'Your fine is $50 and costs,' the judge said. "That's just what I expected." Timson answered. "I'll make the fine $150—do you expect any more?" snapped Judge Pickins.

Sevier County Peach Outlook Reported Poor

DEQUEEN—Most peach orchards in Sevier county will have few, if any, peaches, according to County Agent Charles U. Robinson. Many of the live buds will not open and pollinate properly. The hard continued freezes apparently have finished the crop in most orchards, he said. In another week or two the full damage can be seen.

Robinson said that many orchards over the county have had little pruning this winter, and that now is a good time to prune these trees back rather heavily so that a good bud crop may be produced for next year. He said that a pruned peach tree will continue to bear year after year, while the unpruned tree lasts but a little while.

$25,000 Fire Loss At Junction City

Flames Prevented From Spreading When El Dorado Truck Arrives

EL DORADO—Fire originating in the Union Hardware Company at Junction City Thursday caused damage estimated at $25,000 before trucks from the El Dorado Fire Department brought the flames under control.

It was the third serious fire in two years. A two-story building was destroyed at 10:15 p. m. and until the El Dorado trucks arrived it was feared the blaze would spread. Adjacent buildings housing the Sanitary barber shop and the Whiteway cafe were damaged.

The fire was reported at 9:10 and spread rapidly. First reports from Junction City were that the "entire town is going up." P. E. Murphy, Junction City banker, called Mayor Walter L. Goodwin of El Dorado and asked that apparatus be sent. Fire Chief Frank H. Smith and a large truck rushed to Junction City.

The town was plunged in darkness, except for the flames, when the south wall of the hardware store collapsed, crushing electric wires. Other serious fires occurred on December 17, 1930, and on March 14, 1931. A block of business houses was destroyed each time.

The dime-a-dance girl

BY JOAN CLAYTON

copyright 1932 by NEA Service Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

ELLEN ROSSITER, beautiful 20-year-old, falls in love with LARRY HARROWGATE, young artist whom she meets at Dreamland, a dance hall where she works as hostess. Larry is engaged to ELIZABETH BOWES, debutante, but pays attentions to Ellen until his fiancee returns from Europe.

Believing Larry is lost to her, Ellen agrees to marry STEVEN BARCLAY, 57 years old and wealthy, who has paid hospital expenses for her brother, MIKE, injured in a street accident. Ellen knows such a marriage will provide for her mother, MOLLY ROSSITER, and make it possible for her sister, MYRA, to marry BERT ARMSTEAD.

Barclay has been married and divorced.* Scandal accompanied his divorce from LEDA GRAYSON, dancer, and, fearing this talk may be revived, he and Ellen agree to keep their marriage secret until they sail for Europe. Barclay wants to settle a fortune on Ellen but she persuades him to wait until after the ceremony. Barclay's lawyer, SYMES, regards Ellen as a gold-digger.

In a double marriage in a small Connecticut town, Barclay and Ellen and Myra and Armstead are married. Barclay and his bride drive to his Long Island home. Ellen reads in a newspaper that Larry's engagement to Elizabeth Bowes is broken.

That night Barclay suffers a fatal heart attack. Doctors, nurses and Symes, the lawyer, arrive. Symes tells Ellen papers have been stolen proving Barclay's divorce and therefore her marriage is not legal. To avoid scandal she relinquishes all claim to the fortune. Only FERGUS, the butler, knows of her presence in the house that night. Ellen learns Larry Harrowgate is Barclay's nephew. Ellen goes home, committed to keeping her marriage secret to protect Barclay's honor and her own.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLI

A WEEK later Ellen called on Symes. He had telephoned to say he had received the license. The week following Steven's death had been a cruel test of the girl's courage. Myra, Molly and Bert all had helped. Even Mike with his constant, fretful appeals for amusement had helped. Life and the everyday demands of living had caught her up and whirled her onward.

She was a trifle pale that crisp fall day but her blue eyes were clear and steady and her sweet mouth could smile. Symes looked at the girl and saw that she was changed. There were courage and bravery in her face now, courage and bravery that were definitely, unmistakably adult.

"You're looking well," he said inadequately, and stopped and said no more for a space.

"It's been a hard pull, I know," he continued abruptly, "but everything's gone well. You've seen the papers, of course?"

"I have," she said.

Much had been printed about Steven's death and about Steven's will. A sharp legal battle was anticipated between his sister, Mrs. Elliot Barclay Harrowgate, and Leda Grayson Barclay whose divorce had been so recently set aside. No news of Ellen had appeared—no suggestion that another woman had been with Steven when he died. Headlines chronicled the death at St. Agatha's Hospital. Headlines announced that Leda Grayson Barclay, the widow, had arrived too late, speeding by plane from Mexico.

"I wanted to go to the funeral," Ellen announced forlornly as Symes pulled up a chair for her.

"That would have been the sheerest folly," he pointed out, quite his legal, business-like self again. "You've been so sensible about everything else I'm surprised to hear you say that."

Ellen forced a valiant, apologetic smile. He looked away with the consideration she had found so unexpected, then looked back again. She was composed now. Her hands were steady and her eyes were dry.

"I'm sensible about that too—now," she said quietly.

"I've wanted to tell you and here's my chance," Symes began in awkward haste. "If there's anything you need I'll be glad to be of assistance."

THE square Rossiter chin lifted. "There's nothing at all!" Ellen said quickly. "I've always made my own way and I still can. I've been a parasite long enough. Monday I'm going back to work."

"Not on Monday!"

"Yes—Monday."

She checked herself to add, "Don't be alarmed, I wouldn't dream of returning to the store. Lorene came to see me and said she'd try to get my place back for me, but I couldn't do that. There'd be too much gossip and speculation—and besides my brother-in-law works there. I wouldn't want to chance anything coming up that might hurt him."

"Nothing will come up," Symes replied a little uneasily. He rose, walked silently to the end of the room and back. He bent over his desk before he spoke again.

"Well, here it is."

He fumbled in a drawer, produced a document and tossed it to Ellen. The paper opened outward beneath her fingers. She was looking at the license which announced on Sept. 3 the marriage of Steven Barclay to Ellen Rossiter, witnessed by Myra Armstead and Molly Rossiter, signed by Rev. Mr. Cyrus Southey. Ellen read the words with fascinated, fearful eyes. Suddenly she tore the document once across.

"Stop that," Symes called sharply.

"I'm going to tear it up," the girl said.

"You must do no such thing! You might need it terribly some time. If the fact that you were alone with Steven the night he died ever comes out can't you see how valuable a marriage license might be to prove your own—innocence?"

"I'd never use it!" Ellen declared passionately. "I couldn't!"

SYMES did not respond. There was a long silence. He sat down again, his eyes avoiding her eyes.

"What are you keepin' back?" she asked in a clear, even tone.

"You've heard nothing of Fergus, have you?" he questioned deliberately.

"What made you ask that?"

"Nothing especially," he answered, troubled by the steadiness of her glance. "I just wondered because it happens that your presentiment concerning Fergus was correct. He's a rogue—or so I believe."

Ellen's frightened eyes did not waver.

"It appears," Symes continued, clearing his throat, "that it was Fergus who stole the papers proving Steven's divorce and turned them over to Leda Grayson. Fergus was the only person who had access to the safe."

The lawyer spread out his hands.

"Of course we'll never prove it. However, I've come to the conclusion that Fergus is dangerous."

"What could he do?" the girl whispered.

She looked again at the marriage license in her hands.

"If you're going to worry," Symes responded, "I'll be sorry I mentioned him. I only did it because I thought you should be warned.

"In the unlikely event he is able to locate you, in the unlikely event he does turn up, just ignore anything he says or, better still, refer him to me. I'll settle him quick enough. Blackmail's actionable!"

Symes continued to regard her. "Don't you see now why you should keep the license for your own protection?"

She said nothing at all.

"You have the advantage of being poor," Symes suggested more confidently. "A real advantage in many ways. Fergus' only interest in you would be getting money. When he learns you haven't any he'll leave you alone."

ELLEN looked around the ordered desk, whipped a match from a holder, struck it and applied the glowing end to her marriage license. Symes made no move. She held the burning paper until the flame came too near her fingers. Then she walked to the half open window, released the paper and watched the tiny flame drift downward 20 stories toward the street.

"That's so I won't be tempted to use it," she said, turning around again.

"If there was any nobility in my running away with you that morning, which I'm beginning to doubt," she explained slowly, "it was in trying to prevent people from imagining that Steven thought so little of my honor and his own that he would contract a shabby, fraudulent marriage. That marriage license—I suppose I might have used it to prove I was innocent but it would have been used at his expense."

"Aren't you afraid," Symes asked gravely, "that the day may come when you'll wish you hadn't been so reckless?"

"Terribly afraid. That's why I burned it."

"I can't understand your viewpoint."

"I don't entirely understand it myself," said Ellen thoughtfully as she sat down again. "I imagine I'm rather like an ostrich—so determined that part of my life is over that I've come almost to believe it never happened. From the day after Steven's death when I took off my wedding ring I've almost believed he and I never went to a little town in Connecticut and were married. I remember him as he was in the store, not as my husband.

"At the same time," she persisted, "I know I don't want any life-lines like that marriage license. If the thing ever comes out—if anything ever happens— I'll just have to let people think what they will think. It will be my punishment."

"Punishment for what?"

"For marrying Steven when I didn't really love him," she answered somberly. "You knew that all the time, I think."

"I did know."

After a pause Symes asked, "But my dear child, don't you ever hope to marry?"

"I certainly do," she answered honestly. Then quite simply she told him of Larry Harrowgate. The lawyer looked at her compassionately and did not speak.

"It's a terrible mix-up, isn't it," she concluded.

"It is a mix-up," he agreed.

"I don't suppose I'll ever see him again so there's no use worrying," Ellen said resolutely.

"You'll see him again—I'm sure of it."

Ellen treasured those words. Illogically she tried to believe the same thing. Aloud she put the question that had so often sounded in her heart.

"If I do meet Larry again do you think I can ever make him—understand?"

LOOK TO THIS DAY

For it is life, the very life of life,
In its brief course lie all the varieties
and realities of your existence;
The bliss of growth;
The glory of action;
The splendor of beauty;
For yesterday is already a dream,
and tomorrow is only a vision;
But today, well lived, makes every Yesterday a dream of happiness, and every tomorrow a vision of hope.
Look well, therefore, to this day!
Such is the salutation of the dawn!

Attack Act Validity

HOUSTON—(AP)—An attack on validity of common purchaser provisions as applying to natural gas of the Texas state pipe line act was started before a three-judge federal court here Thursday. Five companies appeared asking injunction to restrain enforcement of that section of the statute, contending it was confiscatory and in violation of due process constitutional clauses. Governor Ross S. Sterling, Attorney General James V. Allred and members of the state railroad commission are defendants, in their official capacities.

Sends Wife Away, Commits Suicide

Ed C. Morgan, Hot Springs Salesman, Gives No Reason for Act

HOT SPRINGS—Ed C. Morgan, 34, salesman for Swift and Company entered the bathroom of his home, 704 Linwood avenue, Thursday afternoon and sent a .38-caliber bullet through his head. He died a few minutes after being taken to St. Joseph's infirmary. He gave no reason for his act.

Mrs. Hazel Morgan, his wife, told Chief of Police Joe Wakelin and Day Captain Arch Cooper, that her husband asked her to go to the bank, The negro maid said that soon after Mrs. Morgan left Morgan entered the bathroom. She heard a shot and the sound of the falling body.

The family had lived here about six years, before coming here. Morgan was with the same company in Little Rock two or three years. His territory included Hot Springs and a few surrounding towns, including Mountain Pine and Mount Ida. He is survived by three children, Mildred, 10; Edward, seven, and Janice, the baby daughter; five brothers, Will, Swifton, Frel, Floride; Robert, traveling salesman; L. B., Little Rock, and Raymond, Tupelo, Miss.; two sisters, Mrs. H. Browning, Tupelo, and Mrs. Will Humphreys, Charleston; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Morgan, Tupelo. Morgan was a Mason, and the family attended the Christian church.

Common Lawmarrigaes Are Declared Illegal

LINCOLN, Neb.—(AP)—Common law marriages were declared illegal Friday by the Nebraska supreme court. It revealed two previous decisions recognizing such unions and said the state legislature in 1923 amended the statues to invalidate them. The opinion said:

"A valid marriage can be contracted in Nebraska only when the parties have previously obtained a license to marry and when the marriage has been solemnized by a person authorized by law."

Officers Seeking Robbers Capture Liquor Still

MENA, Ark.—While Deputy Sheriffs Pearson and Hungate were following a trail supposed to have been left by the Hatfield bank robbers, they discovered a moonshine still. The liquor making outfit was in Oklahoma, and the Polk county officers secured assistance from federal authorities and raided the moonshine joint. No arrests were made but four barrels of mash and the equipment were destroyed.
